

I really think that it is important to keep the No Call List the way it is, since this list has been implemented we no longer get several calls a night (on average) from people pushing products that we don't want or need. As adults we are able to decide if we want to get additional information on a product, and pursue it ourselves, without getting annoying calls from companies that we aren't interested in. Also, if we have decided to drop a company and go with another company, I can understand a call to find out why we discontinued our services, so they can look at the issues and determine if they need to change the way they are doing business or possibly modify what they are offering to be competitive in the market place, but if we go with another company I don't want to get calls from a company that I have chosen to discontinue my services with.
